Dear Hiring Manager,

I'm writing to recommend Kelsey Tietjen for a medical sales position. I met Kelsey recently and was immediately impressed by her communication skills, her genuine curiosity about the industry, and her potential as a sales professional.

During our interactions, Kelsey demonstrated exactly the qualities we look for in medical sales. She asked thoughtful questions about the clinical side of the business, quickly understood the value of the technology, and showed real interest in how it impacts physicians and patients. She has the rare combination of clinical knowledge — since she is a certified EMT — paired with a true sales mindset. She understands how providers think about patient care and what drives their decisions, and she knows how to build rapport and trust fast.

What impressed me most was her approach to learning. She came prepared, asked smart questions, and was genuinely driven to understand how medical sales works rather than settling for the surface. That coachability and initiative — the willingness to go above and beyond to fully understand something — are exactly what it takes to succeed in this industry. Her EMT background also speaks to her composure. She is steady, professional, and confident in fast-moving situations, and she does not rattle under pressure.

Why Kelsey Will Excel in Medical Sales:

Her clinical background gives her instant credibility with healthcare providers. Her communication skills are strong, and she listens more than she talks — which is rare and valuable. Her grit and her drive to master new information quickly mean she will understand the products and the customer landscape faster than most candidates. And she brings the kind of professionalism and adaptability that holds up in a fast-paced environment.

I have confidence that Kelsey will be an asset to any medical sales team. She has the foundation, the mindset, and the determination to succeed.

I'd be happy to discuss further if needed.
